The procedures and final studies are well illustrated with drawings, radiographs, and photographs. For the most part, the copies of the radiographs are of high quality and the diagrams are simple and to the point. The sections dealing with the shoulder, hip, and wrist are particularly well written and readable. The attention given to computerized tomography is limited and MRI is only mentioned in passing; this book is primarily devoted to conventional arthrography. Of course, the anatomical discussions would apply to any modality.

This text is directed at radiologists or orthopaedic surgeons who deal with arthrography in their general practice. A nuclear medicine physician might find this book to be a useful library resource if he or she wished to study the synovial space about the various joints in the body.

ROBERT B. POLINER Baylor College of Medicine Houston, Texas

Books Received

Cardiovascular Nuclear Medicine. K.P. Lyons. East Norwalk, Appleton & Lange, 1988, 318 pp, $75.00

Magnetic Resonance Imaging: Atlas of the Head, Neck, and Spine. C. Mills, J. de Groot, J. P. Posin. Philadelphia, Lea & Febiger, 1988, 295 pp, $98.50

Imaging in Clinical Practice. A. Chalmers, J. McKillop, P. Robinson. London, Edward Arnold, 1988, 340 pp, $7.95

Diagnostic Nuclear Medicine, 2nd Edition. A. Gottschalk, P. Hoffer, E. J. Potchen. York, Williams & Wilkins, 1988, 1153 pp, 2 Vol., $215.00