

FROM THE SNMITS PRESIDENT

The New SNMITS: Changes and Challenges

We all know that change is inevitable. What a lot of people don't realize is that in order to grow and be successful, an organization must change. Ideas, structures, and processes are not meant to be permanent. The most successful organizations are those that are adaptable, flexible, and resilient. In March of 2003 when the SNMITS created its new strategic plan, leadership recognized the need for change in the society's organizational structure. We needed to be able to meet the needs of a constantly changing professional environment. We needed a flexible organizational structure that was able to respond rather than react to change. We needed the ability to work on tasks and see them through to completion, and we needed the ability to provide timely, relevant information to our membership.

Keeping in mind those goals, a task force was formed in May 2003 to help develop a new structure. In June 2003 the National Council accepted, in concept, a reorganization plan. Additional recommendations came from the Executive Board in October 2003. Based on the recommendations, the Bylaws Committee drafted the proposed changes and presented them to the National Council in February 2004. The plan was approved for vote by the general membership and included the following recommendations:

- The Executive Board would serve as the governing body of the SNMITS, approving individual projects and programs and the budget.
- The National Council, renamed National Council of Representatives (NCR), would discuss professional and organizational issues and funnel information and thoughts from the grassroots. It would be the organizational think tank, sounding board, and grassroots representation.
- Committees would be restructured. Standing committees would be those defined by the bylaws and would have continuing assignments from year to year. Special committees would undertake long-term assignments, make policy recommendations to the NCR and the Executive Board, and carry out the work of the SNMITS. Task forces would be formed to focus on specific projects and see them through to completion.

- The SNMITS president would head the Executive Board, and a speaker of the house would be elected to run the NCR meetings. The NCR would be expanded to include representatives from industry, students, educators, emerging technologies, cardiology, and administration/management. These special representatives, as well as the Committee on Nominations, would be elected by the NCR.

President, SNMITS

At the February National Council meeting, a fast implementation plan was approved, contingent on the general membership voting in favor of the changes. Leadership was tasked with the formation of new committees and task forces. The process began in April and was completed at the annual meeting. The new governance structures was put into place at the close of the annual meeting.

Leadership identified 5 priorities for the coming year:

1. Recognition of the need for an advanced practice educational model and start-up program;
2. Development of a new, forward-looking educational model for nuclear medicine professionals;
3. Development of a distance learning, PET/CT didactic training program;
4. Continued advocacy on behalf of technologists; and
5. Professional development to train future leaders and ensure the viability of our organization

The coming year will be filled with change, challenges, and opportunities. My goal is to provide vision and be a catalyst for change. I want to give all members the opportunity to grow both personally and professionally. I believe our new structure will strengthen, unify, and carry our organization through the challenges that lie ahead. We will all learn and grow together.

I look forward to the coming year and to working with every member and with the SNMITS and SNM leadership. ❁
